PLACE At the station

PLOT

There is an old lady at the train station. She takes a packet of biscuits from the vending machine and puts them in her bag. Then she sits on the bench next to a boy. The old lady starts eating biscuits but takes by mistake the boy's biscuits. Also the boy eats the biscuits and the old lady gets angry because she thinks that the biscuits are hers.

The train arrives and old lady gets

SYMBOLS

1. the old lady represents old age in general and the boy represents young age.

2. the old lady has got a newspaper and the boy has a mobile phone: they represent the new and the old generations.

at the beginning the lady is angry, but the boy is calm.
At the end the lady discovers her packet of biscuits and she is sorry.

MORAL OF THE STORY

this story teaches that: the old lady regrets having eaten the boy's biscuits instead of hers.

The morals of the text can be as follows:

- ❖ to check if things are yours and not someone else's.
- ❖ don't judge a book by its cover
- ❖ be careful not to misjudge people

...you can choose your preferred one!!!

MORE ABOUT

The old lady looks actually like the female version of the old man from the PIXAR movie "UP". She also behaves like him, nervous and impatient.

The oldest man/lady in the world is Jeanne Calment she is 122 years old and the oldest man is Mbah is 146 years old getting hungry is not a good idea because it's dangerous for the mind, body and heart

The best-selling snack from vending machine is impossible to calculate because the vending machines are located in different places and each person who buys something from the vending machine will always be different
